EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Business Problem

• Fund managers struggle with the time-consuming task of reading and summarizing a vast amount of news daily, leading to inefficiencies in their workflow.

Solution

 Deploy an AI language model to automatically read and summarize news articles, streamlining the process and reducing manual effort.

Impact

• Enhanced efficiency, saving fund managers up to 50% of the time spent on news processing. Improved focus on strategic decision-making and fund management activities.

Challenges:

- Managing the large volume of news to ensure comprehensive coverage.
- Addressing AI-generated inaccuracies or "hallucinations" that may affect reliability.
- Ensuring high-quality translations, particularly for Thai-language content.

1. BUSINESS PROBLEM

- 1. Overload of Information: Fund managers face an overwhelming amount of news to read and summarize daily, which is time-consuming and inefficient.
- 2. Risk of Missing Critical Information: With the constant influx of news, fund managers may miss important market updates, leading to missed investment opportunities or poor decision-making.
- 3. Delayed Decision-Making: Spending too much time processing news manually can delay critical investment decisions, impacting portfolio performance.
- 4. Inconsistent Analysis: Different fund managers might interpret or prioritize news differently, leading to inconsistencies in portfolio management and investment strategy.
- 5. High Operational Costs: The manual effort required to sort through and analyze news increases operational costs, reducing the efficiency and profitability of fund management teams.

2. SOLUTION

- 1. Obtain financial news from sources like Refinitiv. However, raw news can be difficult to use due to a quality of difference source of news.
- 2. Filter the news by using AI to score and rank the news based on correlation, according to the following criteria:
 - 0: Low correlation
 - 1: High correlation
- 3. Clean the data by removing tags, web links, or advertisements.
- 4. Summarize only highly correlated news according to the specified format.
- 5. Translate the summarized news into Thai.

2. SOLUTION

The U.S. economy showed strong resilience in September, with job growth significantly surpassing expectations. The Labor Department reported 254,000 jobs were added, and the unemployment rate fell to 4.1%. This positive labor market data has eased recession fears and reduced the likelihood of large interest rate cuts by the Federal Reserve. As a result, Wall Street surged, with major indexes like the Dow Jones, S&P 500, and Nasdaq all posting gains. The strong job market data has shifted expectations toward smaller interest rate cuts in the future.

- The U.S. added 254,000 jobs in September, much higher than the expected 147,000, and the unemployment rate decreased to 4.1%.
- The strong job data has reduced the likelihood of a 50 basis point interest rate cut by the Federal Reserve in November, with markets now expecting a smaller 25 basis point cut.
- Major stock indexes, including the Dow Jones, S&P 500, and Nasdaq, rose following the positive job report, reflecting increased market confidence.
- The energy sector saw significant gains, poised for its biggest weekly jump in two years amid concerns over supply disruptions in the Middle East.
- Spirit Airlines and Rivian faced challenges: Spirit's stock dropped due to bankruptcy talks, and Rivian lowered its production forecast.

China

China has introduced a significant economic stimulus package to boost its domestic economy, leading to a rise in stock markets and attracting investor attention. The Shanghai Composite Index saw a substantial increase, and the People's Bank of China plans to reduce the reserve requirement ratio, potentially freeing up funds for lending. However, concerns remain about weak credit demand and the need for more sustainable economic reforms. Foreign investors are cautious, and the long-term impact of the stimulus on China's economy is uncertain.

- The Shanghai Composite Index surged by 8.06% and has risen nearly 22% since September 20.
- The People's Bank of China plans to cut the reserve requirement ratio by 50 basis points, potentially freeing up 1 trillion yuan for new lending.
- Despite the stimulus, credit demand remains weak, and there are concerns about the sustainability of the economic recovery.
- Foreign investors are cautious, and the success of the stimulus in attracting sustained investment depends on future economic reforms and fiscal measures.

Japan

The Japanese stock market experienced fluctuations this week, influenced by the yen's depreciation and political developments. The yen fell sharply against the U.S. dollar after Japanese Prime Minister Shigeru Ishiba indicated that the current economic environment is not suitable for raising interest rates. This depreciation benefited export-oriented companies, leading to a rise in the Nikkei index. However, the market also faced challenges, such as a weekly drop due to investor uncertainty over Ishiba's comments and the resolution of a U.S. dock workers strike, which affected shipping stocks. Additionally, rising oil prices due to tensions in the Middle East supported gains in energy-related shares.

- The Nikkei index rose by 1.97% on Thursday due to the yen's weakness, benefiting exporters.
- Prime Minister Ishiba's comments on interest rates led to a significant drop in the yen, impacting market dynamics.
- Shipping stocks fell sharply after the quick resolution of a U.S. dock workers strike.
- Rising oil prices due to geopolitical tensions supported gains in energy-related stocks.
- Despite fluctuations, the Japanese market showed modest gains on Friday, with financial stocks leading the rise.

3. APPLICATION

Collaboration framework

Step 1: Data science team creates an AI system that summarizes news articles retrieved from the Refinitiv API.

Step 2: AI generates summaries in both English and Thai, allowing users to choose their preferred language.

Step 3: Summarized news is sent to employees through the company's internal email.

U.S. news

The U.S. economy showed strong resilience in September, with job growth significantly surpassing expectations. The Labor Department reported 254,000 jobs were added, and the unemployment rate fell to 4.1%. This positive labor market data has eased recession fears and reduced the likelihood of large interest rate cuts by the Federal Reserve. As a result, Wall Street surged, with major indexes like the Dow Jones, S&P 500, and Nasdaq all posting gains. The strong job market data has shifted expectations toward smaller interest rate cuts in the future.

- The U.S. added 254,000 jobs in September, much higher than the expected 147,000, and the unemployment rate decreased to 4.1%.
- The strong job data has reduced the likelihood of a 50 basis point interest rate cut by the Federal Reserve in November, with markets now expecting a smaller 25 basis point cut.
- Major stock indexes, including the Dow Jones, S&P 500, and Nasdaq, rose following the positive job report, reflecting increased market confidence.
- The energy sector saw significant gains, poised for its biggest weekly jump in two years amid concerns over supply disruptions in the Middle East.
- Spirit Airlines and Rivian faced challenges: Spirit's stock dropped due to bankruptcy talks, and Rivian lowered its production forecast.

China news

China has introduced a significant economic stimulus package to boost its domestic economy, leading to a rise in stock markets and attracting investor attention. The Shanghai Composite Index saw a substantial increase, and the People's Bank of China plans to reduce the reserve requirement ratio, potentially freeing up funds for lending. However, concerns remain about weak credit demand and the need for more sustainable economic reforms. Foreign investors are cautious, and the long-term impact of the stimulus on China's economy is uncertain.

- The Shanghai Composite Index surged by 8.06% and has risen nearly 22% since September 20.
- The People's Bank of China plans to cut the reserve requirement ratio by 50 basis points, potentially freeing up 1 trillion yuan for new lending.
- Despite the stimulus, credit demand remains weak, and there are concerns about the sustainability of the economic recovery.
- Foreign investors are cautious, and the success of the stimulus in attracting sustained investment depends on future economic reforms and fiscal measures.

Japan news

The Japanese stock market experienced fluctuations this week, influenced by the yen's depreciation and political developments. The yen fell sharply against the U.S. dollar after Japanese Prime Minister Shigeru Ishiba indicated that the current economic environment is not suitable for raising interest rates. This depreciation benefited export-oriented companies, leading to a rise in the Nikkei index. However, the market also faced challenges, such as a weekly drop due to investor uncertainty over Ishiba's comments and the resolution of a U.S. dock workers strike, which affected shipping stocks. Additionally, rising oil prices due to tensions in the Middle East supported gains in energy-related shares.

- The Nikkei index rose by 1.97% on Thursday due to the yen's weakness, benefiting exporters.
- Prime Minister Ishiba's comments on interest rates led to a significant drop in the yen, impacting market dynamics.
- Shipping stocks fell sharply after the quick resolution of a U.S. dock workers strike.
- Rising oil prices due to geopolitical tensions supported gains in energy-related stocks.
- Despite fluctuations, the Japanese market showed modest gains on Friday, with financial stocks leading the rise.
